The historical marker located at the Glen Street railroad station, near the westbound track crossing gates, denotes the first train to depart from this station on May 16, 1867, inaugurating service between Glen Cove and New York City. The Glen Cove 350 Committee recently had this marker refurbished by Forest Iron Works.

The principle transportation mode for people and goods between the Glen Cove community and New York had been the Long Island Sound steamboats since that service began in 1829. Steamboats brought thousands of visitors to Glen Cove from New York by water, disembarking at the steamer wharf, or “landing,” where the Morgan Park breakwater is today. The Long Island Railroad was incorporated in 1835, but by the end of the Civil War had only reached Glen Head on the north shore branch. With the extension of the railroad into Glen Cove completed in 1867, a second reliable transportation route to and from New York was now available. This route became known as the Glen Cove, Roslyn and Mineola Branch Railroad.

Glen Cove station at Glen Street was both a passenger and freight terminal in those days. Sea Cliff station also opened that year with the extension of the line to Glen Cove. The Nassau station, added 30 years later, located east of Glen Street station along the rail line, is today called “Glen Cove”, and the original namesake railroad station built in 1867 is “Glen Street” on today’s Oyster Bay Branch. The City of Glen Cove is the only Long Island community to have three railroad stations because the Sea Cliff station actually lies within Glen Cove’s city limits.

As railroad service advanced and improved throughout Long Island, it competed with the Long Island Sound steamers for nearly 50 years. While the steamboats, with landings at Glen Cove, Sea Cliff, and Glenwood Landing, gave rise to this area as a tourist destination, with large resort hotels and boarding houses springing up throughout The Landing neighborhood of Glen Cove, the railroad tracks eventually reached Oyster Bay (1889) – the end of the line for the LIRR Oyster Bay Branch.

Glen Cove’s Nassau station (today, “Glen Cove” station) came about in conjunction with the founding of the Queens County Golf Club in 1895, located between Red Spring Lane and Crescent Beach Road. Many of the wealthy members of this newly-formed club (the first golf club on the North Shore) came from Brooklyn and Manhattan, traveling to Glen Cove by train. Desiring a more upscale train station than the Glen Street freight depot, the club members petitioned the Long Island Railroad to allow them to build their own station on the line, east of Glen Street. Coincidently, or intentionally, this picturesque passenger depot, completed in 1895, would be adjacent to a 107-acre tract acquired by the club in 1898 along St. Andrews Lane. The Queens County Golf Club moved across town and reopened officially as the Nassau Country Club at its current location in 1899. The name change coincided with the creation of Nassau County out of Queens County, which came into being on January 1, 1899.

At the turn of the century, the railroad was beginning to overshadow the steamboat as the most reliable service between New York and Glen Cove. In addition, trolley lines were being constructed for local travel in communities throughout the area. In 1905 a link between the two primary transportation modes was affected in Glen Cove with the establishment of the Glen Cove Railroad Line, an electric trolley. The trolley ran from the steamboat landing, through the village to the Glen Street railroad station, and thence alongside the track right-of-way to Sea Cliff station.

Towards the end of the 19th century a number of major steamboat disasters – fires and sinkings – may have accelerated the demise of the L.I. Sound steamers. In 1916, the last scheduled steamboat called at Glen Cove’s landing. With the end of regular steamer service, the electric trolley line was moving fewer passengers between The Landing and the railroad stations, and was discontinued in 1924. The Long Island Railroad was now the primary transportation mode for the region, but the automobile was shortly to become its new competitor.
