The year 1941, the world was in turmoil. Hitler was ravaging Europe. Russia had invaded Finland, and Finland was doing a good job against the Russians.

Churches and organizations were holding dances and cake sales in an attempt to raise money to help the Finns. The United States was helping Great Britain with ships and materials. Congress had passed a law conscripting men for the Army between the ages of 21 and 36. Young men were volunteering for the Army, Navy and Marines – no Air Force. The Air Force was a branch of the Army. Then Germany invaded Russia. This allied the Russians with Great Britain and France, a seemingly unnatural alliance, but that’s the way it was!

We were seniors looking forward to graduating from high school. Into what? Nothing? Very few could afford, or would go on to, college. There was no industry on Long Island, no labor market to speak of. Glen Cove was lucky. It had a little industry. Wah Chang, Columbia Ribbon and Carbon, Powers, Dykman Laundry and three or four dress factories. It supplied a few laborers for the surrounding estates, and caddies for the golf courses. That was the extent of the labor market facing most of us. That is the way it was!

Sunday, December 7, 1941. Japan bombed Pearl Harbor. People were glued to their radios, those who had radios. Many homes did not in those days, and television was not in our vocabulary yet. The full significance of this act did not really sink into most school kids’ minds, I guess. What was “war”? Something that happened a million miles away, to countless, faceless “other people” we were not involved with? That is the way it was!

Monday, December 8, 1941. First period boys gym class. Mr. Kuhn, boys gym teacher sat us down in gym class. We listened to President Roosevelt’s speech, the “official declaration of war” against Japan. Germany declared war against the United States. This allied us with Great Britain, France and Russia. Mr. Kuhn, foreseeing that most of us would wind up in the services, started to train us in basic military drills and marching in gym class to be followed with the use of wooden guns made in wood working shop. This later brought a commendation from the government for Mr. Kuhn.

As seniors in high school, we suddenly had to think “war.” The senior trip to Washington—cancelled, the graduating class yearbook—cancelled. Certain commodities became scare. Gasoline, butter, even “Lucky Strike” green went to war. That meant the cigarette packages went from green to white. The green pigment was needed for the war effort.

Industrial America had started to awaken, to expand, to manufacture and supply armies for global conflicts. Suddenly a labor market appeared on Long Island. Grumman, Republic, Fairchild, Liberty, Sperry, even Wah Chang in Glen Cove expanded somewhat. Skilled workers were required by expanding war related industries. Grumman started an after school program in Glen Cove High School, training two dozen seniors on factory related skills. Some kids quit school in their senior year to join the Services. Congress passed a law requiring 18 and 19 year-olds to register for the draft, but could not be classified or drafted until their 21st birthday. This was later changed in 1942 by another act of Congress, to classify and draft 18 and 19 year-olds. That is the way it was!

Due to the war, there was no yearbook for the 1942 graduating class from Glen Cove High School. And that’s the way it is!

Do you want to be part of History? Make a contribution to The Robert R. Coles Long Island History Room by donating your old photographs, artifacts and memorabilia. We would be delighted to add your history to our collection!
